

Open Letter President Obama and Members of Congress

The undersigned organizations and companies, representing nearly all sectors of the U.S. agricultural economy, urge you to stand up for American exports and the jobs that depend on them by taking immediate action to implement the pending free trade agreements (FTAs) with South Korea, Colombia and Panama. The longer we wait to implement these agreements, the farther behind we will fall in these markets to our competitors.

Each of these trade agreements was signed at least four years ago. Since that time, the European Union initiated trade talks with Korea, finalized the deal last year and implemented it on July 1. The Korean government released figures last week showing that in the first two weeks of the EU FTA, trade volume between the two rose 17.4 percent. Exports from Korea to the EU rose 19 percent, and exports from the EU to Korea rose 16 percent.

The Korea-EU trade deal almost certainly comes at the expense of U.S. products. The United States is now at a disadvantage to the EU in the Korean market; while EU products are eligible for reduced or zero tariffs, the United States still faces full import duties. Unless the United States enacts the U.S.-Korea trade agreement, this market could be lost. Korea now has in place or is negotiating 13 FTAs involving some 50 nations around the world. In addition to the 27-nation EU, these include Chile, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, Mexico, MERCOSUR (Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay), Peru and the 10-nation ASEAN bloc.

If there is any doubt about the seriousness of the problem for U.S. agricultural exports, one need only consider the damage that has already been done by the delay in implementing the Colombia FTA. Argentina and Brazil have negotiated trade agreements through MERCOSUR with Colombia that have given them preferential access for a number of key commodities, including corn, wheat and soybeans. As a result, U.S.-produced corn, wheat and soybeans have been hit hard, and the U.S. share of Colombia's total agricultural imports has fallen from 47 percent to 21 percent since 2008. On August 15, Canada's FTA with Colombia will take effect, and our exports to Colombia of wheat and other agricultural products will take another hit.

It's difficult to watch years of market development evaporate in a matter of months because we are not able to compete on the basis of price, making the United States the residual supplier where it was once the main supplier. Studies have shown that the benefits of the trade agreements to U.S. agriculture and rural economies would be substantial. U.S. agriculture is prepared to work to achieve the full benefits of these agreements but can only do so if the U.S. government moves quickly to pass these agreements.

The prospect of a delay in action on the three FTAs until the fall has come as a disappointment to the agricultural community. With clear bipartisan support for these agreements, we had remained optimistic that these deals would be approved before the August recess. Our FTA partners clearly thought likewise. The Korean government has signaled its willingness to hold a special session in August to act on its implementing bill, but that is now in doubt.

The prospect of Congress passing the trade agreements with Korea, Colombia and Panama before the August recess are highly unlikely at this point. We therefore urge you to act swiftly in September to implement these important agreements. These are good markets, they are strong U.S. allies and each has taken significant steps to help make the FTAs a reality. The seemingly endless delays on our side do not serve our economic or foreign policy interests, and they run the risk of causing long-term damage to U.S. food and farm exports.
